

Evening Telegraph

PUBLISHED EVERY AFTERNOON (SUNDAYS EXCEPTED), AT THE EVENING TELEGRAPH BUILDING, No. 108 S. THIRD STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

MONDAY, APRIL 4, 1870.

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH, from its original establishment, has been in the receipt of telegraphic news from the New York Associated Press, which consists of the Tribune, Times, Herald, World, Sun, Journal of Commerce, Evening Post, Commercial Advertiser, and Evening Express. The success which has attended our enterprise is, in itself, a sufficient evidence of the freshness, fullness, and reliability of the news which we have received from this source.

MORE INDIAN DIFFICULTIES.

Two leading phases of the Indian question and of the practical difficulty of making a satisfactory disposition of the savages are presented by Associated Press despatches published this morning. On the one hand Vincent Collyer, in a letter to the President, complains bitterly of the wanton cruelty of a military officer in bombarding an Indian village in Alaska; and on the other a despatch from South Pass City, Wyoming Territory, states that six white citizens have recently been massacred, and that a stage coach containing a number of important personages has probably been attacked by a body of Indians who were supposed to be peaceable and "friendly," as they had recently been sent by General Angur to the region in which they committed these ravages.

the poor excuse that a state of war, as they understand it, existed. According to all military rules, they were bound to keep the peace, and their unexpected outbreak is but one of a long series of similar incidents which have given rise to the terrible frontier maxim that "There is but one good Indian, and he is dead."

FECHTER AT HOME.

When Boston does get its enthusiasm up it generally goes it pretty strong, and the members of the Mutual Admiration Society tickle each other in a manner quite as edifying to the public as it is agreeable to themselves. Boston had been languishing for a first-class sensation ever since the great Peace Jubilee, and there was some talk of engaging Dr. Holmes to walk a tight rope from the dome of the State House to the frog pond, just for the sake of convincing all the world and the rest of mankind that Boston is still the "hub" of the universe. Luckily Fechter came along just in the nick of time, and found New York unappreciative. He went to Boston; Dr. Holmes and Professor Longfellow saw him, said he was a great actor, invited him to dinner, and the rest of Boston fell at the feet of Fechter and worshipped. Fechter came to Philadelphia, but he wished afterwards that he had remained in Boston, for he found Philadelphia critical. Now he is happy, for he has returned to Boston, which one of the journals of that city informs us he considers his "American home," and in the enjoyment of "the pleasant homage of literary people" Fechter is happy; Boston is happy, and all is serene. Boston has one regret, however, and that is that Fechter will persist in playing "Legardere" in that trashy and sensational play "The Duke's Motto," which, we are informed, is too strong for the sensitive Boston palate. The literati of the "Hub" wish to see Fechter do "Iago," "Richard III.," and "Macbeth;" but Fechter knows himself better than Boston does, and he prefers to secure the approbation of Dr. Holmes and Professor Longfellow in picturesque and emotional parts such as "Ruy Blas," "Claude Melnotte," and "Legardere," rather than to risk a failure in the intellectual creations of Shakespeare. The critics outside of Boston have pretty well settled Fechter's status as an actor, and he being wise in his generation, will enjoy "the pleasant homage of the literary people" of Boston while he may, by giving them what he knows to be his best and letting them believe, if they will, that he can do better if he chooses.

THE BENEFICIAL results of the fifteenth amendment are beginning to show themselves already. The Democratic, fire-eating, and Copperhead Governor Bowie, of Maryland, has accepted the situation, and has vetoed an act incorporating Chestertown, in Kent county, because the persons entitled to vote under the provisions of this bill are described as "white male citizens." There will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth on the Eastern Shore when the news of this veto is received at the cross-road groceries that are the centres of intelligence in that benighted region, and curses both loud and deep will be bestowed upon Bowie, Congress, the "niggers," and all parties concerned. It is well that Governor Bowie was able thus early to show the people of the Eastern Shore that negro suffrage is now the law of the land, for the probabilities are that otherwise they would not have heard of the fifteenth amendment in time to conciliate the negro vote for the next Presidential election. The Eastern Shore of Maryland is a slow place, but it sometimes receives a shock that galvanizes it into a temporary activity; and we can imagine nothing better calculated to wake up the people than for a Democratic Governor to go back upon the time-honored principle that "a nigger has no rights that a white man is bound to respect." Governor Bowie, by promptly acknowledging the rights of the negroes and the fifteenth amendment, has shown himself to be a man of sense, and it will be well for the Democratic party if others of its leaders follow his example.

THE CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT in Europe is a formidable one, and with each passing day becomes even more so. A correspondent, writing upon the subject, says that in Germany two factions, the great Schutze Deiltsch system, or Hand-works genossenschaft, and the yet more powerful political system of Lassalle, called the Deutsche-Arbeiter Vereine, threaten to convulse Europe. In Spain, where I see purer specimens of co-operation than I have seen in Germany, the societies live in perfect harmony. In England, where co-operation has outstripped prejudice, and where its beneficial results are already immortalizing the century, the powerful trades union faction brings down upon it the hammer of radical opinions, and declares co-operation, which enriches a workman with isolated ownership, to be contradictory to its remote remote but nicely-defined idea of collectivity or associated workmanship. In Spain, co-operation and trades unions all mean one thing. Spain is in a state of political ebullition. The middle classes, who consider themselves above co-operation, whose very name suggests individual want, demand the demolition of the Spanish aristocracy which rules its peoples by infatuating them with superstitions. But they are held in check at this moment by this strange compound of social organization, co-operation. The unions of resistance, which work another way to accomplish the same object—the elevation of producers—is still greater. In Germany and England they are political; while in Spain they are also making co-operation political, by infusing into it theories of political transformation which seem absolutely necessary to its growth. According to the annual report of Schutze Deiltsch, there were, in 1869, 191 associations of co-operative banks or stores. In 1867, the number had increased to 216, and in 1868 to 558. The budgets of 75 of these show an aggregate of 35,859 members, and they turned a business of $2,517,313 in 1868. The German co-operative societies have already maintained this record, and it is not until recently that they have been constrained to take measures for forming themselves into the "General Union German Association." Conventions and mass meetings have recently been held for that purpose. Thirty-seven societies of the Prussian Rhenish provinces have combined agriculture with co-operation, and are buying steam engines and agricultural implements. There are now 161 workmen's banks and loan associations. Of these 675 are in Prussia, 418 in Germany and Austria, and 289 in Bohemia. In 656 of these there are 260,700 members who are working upon a capital of $10,240,499, which is all their own, and a borrowed auxiliary capital of $2,995,142, from which they make an average clear gain of 2 per cent. a year. Their total business in 1869 shows an average gain over last year of 17 per cent. Some of these associations do not respond to the invitation to send their address, and reports are consequently but little known; but so far as is known, the entire German co-operation societies number about 2650, with an aggregate of 1,000,000 members, and a business of not less than $20,000,000 currency in 1868. Such is the progress of German association. In England it is still greater. France taken to co-operation because resistance is not allowed. Italy, Belgium, and Switzerland are rapidly forming a great confederation for the establishment of the United States of Europe, for the demolition of fortifications, and the annihilation of armies and frontiers. But in Spain, where there are known to be one hundred and ninety-five societies, with twenty-five thousand members, doing an aggregate of $22,800,000 a year, the utmost harmony and fusion of methods prevail. This reciprocity is in Spain declared to be the only means by which the freedom of producers can be obtained, and the co-operative associations are as anxious for the Industrial party and the European Democratic Confederation as are the societies of resistance, with which they do not hesitate to combine.
